Schoonover was a most popular member, one might almost say the leader, of her set. That is to say, she was fair, thin, and thirty-five, and spent most of her time at clubs, charity bazars, and concerts. Besides dominating her husband and the other domestics, she enjoyed smoking, drank cocktails, and played bridge, not as a game, but scientifically. It was her profession. Some people actually went so far as to attribute her remarkable skill to dexterity of the hand; but always behind her back. One morning she was on the chaise longue of her boudoir, when the maid, French, and therefor pretty, entered with the mornings mail. For a little while madame continued fondling the silken ear of her pet spaniel; then she put him on the floor with an admonishing pat and stretched luxuriously, revealing shapely, white arms, as the pink silk...
