

The Center Is Everywhere: Celtic Spirituality in the Postmodern World

By Bruce Epperly

Parson's Porch Books. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 142 pages. You are about to embark on a uniquely postmodern adventure. Postmodern spirituality is profoundly experiential, fluid, dialogical, and relational. Uncomfortable with fixed doctrines and institutional orthodoxy, the post-modern spirit seeks holiness and wholeness in experiencing God in ordinary as well as dramatic experiences, mediated through daily tasks, intimate relationships, clusters of friends gathered in times of celebration and pain, and moments of awe and wonder in which new energies and insights stream into our lives. Post-modern spirituality experiences the Divine in moments of creative transformation in which prayer, worship, contemplation, service, and healing embrace, in an ever-moving now, both ancient wisdom and future hope, in ways that engage all the senses as portals of revelation. Faith is fluid, emerging, and evolving, as personal and communal spirituality integrates the wisdom of Christianity with that of Buddhism, Islam, Judaism, Hinduism, new spiritual movements, contemporary physics, complementary medicine, and earth-based faiths. At such a time as ours, an emerging, vital, transformed and transforming Celtic spirituality provides a way of wholeness for pilgrims within and beyond Christianity. The way of Celtic Christian spirituality finds divine revelation in the cells of bodies, the glistening waters,...
