We do not know the name of Byron s absent friend. The one we should like to have here would be mamma. Well, it s no good our sighing and getting sentimental, so we will be off again. Down we go like an arrow from a bow, to the steamer. Thanks, captain, we are all right, and none the worse for our little lark. And our carpet is a lark, because of the way it soars up into the sky. And here are our tickets, so you need not be anxious any more. No, Mr. John Bull, we cannot take you up next time; three are company, and four are not. We don t wish to be rude, but our carpet will only hold us three little folks. Besides which, you might get giddy and fall off, and then what would become of the Johnny Bulls at home? Passing Rolandseck, we glide by picturesque Andernach and thriving Neuwied, with its settlement of Moravian Brethren. And now we pass under Ehrenbreitstein, the Gibraltar of the Rhine, a strong fortress which it would almost be impossible to take, until we stop at the pier of busy Coblenz. Time is pressing, so we just linger a moment to take on board additional tourists, who fill our vessel from stem to stern, and then on we go past Stolzenfels, where our Queen once stayed while the guest of the King of Prussia. Yonder...
